BRANAMAN—Walter Otis Branaman, whose sickness was briefly mentioned last week, died at the home of his uncle, George R. Hamilton, Monday, January 1, 1906, of typhoid-pneumonia, aged 18 years and 13 days. Otis was the oldest son of William and Alice Branaman, deceased. He was born in Brownstown December 19, 1887, but moved with his parents to Greenwood, Ind., when yet small and from there to Indianapolis, where he continued to reside until last August, when he went to Ronceverte, W. Va., to work in a veneering mill. It was there that he took sick and thinking he would get well if he could only reach the home of his Aunt Sadié he undertook the long trip to Brownstown which was too great an undertaking for his feeble strength. By the time the train reached here he was either asleep or delirious and was carried through some distance west and next day was brought back to Seymour, where he was compelled to wait until the late train at night, arriving here a week ago last Sunday at midnight. With the above exposure and worry added to his already weakened condition, his case was regarded critical from the start. His acquaintance here was somewhat limited, yet he has frequently visited here and held in high esteem by those who knew him. He is survived by one sister, Mrs. Pearl Hawkins, of Indianapolis, and one brother, Roy, of this place, who are the only members of the family left, which together with the circumstances narrated above, makes his death unusually sad. Funeral services were conducted at the M. E. church, Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, Rev. T. W. Northcott and Rev. J. H. Weaver officiating, after which the remains were laid to rest in Fairview cemetery.
