Comment:

Little Rettie Drappenstadt, daughter of Henry and Mary Drappenstadt, whose illness was noted in the last issue, died Sunday, March 16, at one o'clock. The fond parents and sisters are almost crazed with grief by the loss of their heart's affection. Little R-ttie was a bright, intelligent and promising child, loved by all who had the pleasure of being in her company or of knowing her. She was especially a favorite with her schoolmates and teachers. But the Great Master called and the summons had to be obeyed. Scarcely had ten bright summers passed over the bright haired child when she was called to join the great caravan of those who have gone before, out through the great mountain of death into the realms of eternal life. No more will she come to the welcome call of papa or mamma. She has been consigned to the great mother, Earth, but the spirit is with He who said "suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." The parents have the entire sympathy of the community in this, their dark hour of trouble. You Know.
